Public Forums Scheduled on Wisconsin's Energy Future

MADISON – The Public Service Commission (PSC) encourages the public to join us at one of our six public forums being held in May and June. We will present information from Wisconsin's Draft Strategic Energy Assessment, Energy 2010, which forecasts Wisconsin's energy picture for the next seven years. We will share facts on the state's ability to generate and distribute electricity, as well as share information on renewable resources and rates.

The PSC began research in 2003 by asking Wisconsin utilities to look seven years into the future and project their anticipated growth in energy demand, new construction, the need to purchase power from outside sources and the types of fuels they plan to use. Policymakers, regulators and citizens can use the Energy 2010 plan to become more informed about the energy challenges facing our state as we continue to build a reliable energy system that is environmentally and economically sound.
